Wry Whiskey Press. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 230 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in.Jeff Stuart occupies an enviable position in his Blue Ridge foothills town in the summer of 1956. Hes the star halfback on the high school football team, dates the comeliest cheerleader at Rockton High and is destined for a secure position in the family lumber business. Graduation and a football scholarship loom on the horizon. He can have it all if he can just sit quietly in his own room content to listen to the music on his tinny AM radio. The halfbacks descent into small-town disgrace is provoked by the return of Cody Hunter, fresh from serving a two-year hitch in the U. S. Army, to the hometown that had angrily chased him away. When Cody drives his cherry-red 1950 Ford into Rockton, guitar at his side, duck-tail blowing in the breeze, every upright soul in town can see the seeds of juvenile delinquency and rocknroll anarchy sprouting through the cracks in the Main Street pavement. When Jeff sneaks into a country music honky-tonk and watches the guitar-man rock the redneck crowd into a riot, the schoolboy finds himself sucked into a whirlpool that revolves around rocknroll, the bars that house it, and the cats who play it. Jeff becomes the wheel-man for Cody and his round, firm and fully-packed babe--the exotic Naomi of Baltimore. Once exposed to a screaming guitar and a wailing sax on a roadhouse stage, Jeff recognized the truth in Codys words: If it aint live, you aint livin. The pair cut a wide raucous swath through the bars, roadhouses, dance halls and bootleg taverns during the fall and winter, but the spring demands answers to the questions that the boy has avoided since discovering the rockabilly life. Will he...
