Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: .Indeed the Mexican force was so large that Santa Anna thought it ridiculous for the Americans to fight. He demanded of Gen. Taylor that he surrender. A reply was sent back which afterward became a campaign cry and aided in the election of Taylor as president. It was: Gen. Taylor never surrenders. Shortly after that the Mexicans sent in a party under a white flag to Inquire what Gen Taylor was waiting for, and Old Rough and Ready sent back the following: Gen. Taylor is waiting for Gen. Santa Anna to surrender. All this occurred about February 22, which was Washington s birthday. The following day the fighting began in earnest. The Americans were at first driven back, and at one time It seemed as though the battle was lost. Gen. Taylor then gave his celebrated order to Bragg s artillery. It was, Give them a little more grape, Capt. Bragg. Bragg s artillery was situated on a hill nearby. He sent showers of iron hail into the Mexicans, and this threw them Into disorder and flight. The battle had lasted two days, and when the night of the second day came the rival armies held about the same positions that they had had that morning. Our men slept on the field, and when the next morning came It was found that the Mexicans had fled. In that engagement 20,000 Mexicans were beaten by less than 5,000 Americans. Their losses were about 2,500 killed and wounded...
