HERALDKY OF MYTHOLOGY. War preceded Religion. Whether mankind sprang from one or several centres, their emergence from a merely animal state must have been for a long period characterized by modes of life and mental inferiority, little removed from those of brutes, and such as are met with amongst the lowest order of savages in all parts of the earth. The necessities of daily subsistence, the constant struggle with the elements, the perpetual vigilance against the attacks of wild and ferocious beasts, must in the early stages of mans history, have employed all his physical energies, and have entirely absorbed his feeble mental faculties, to the complete exclusion of any but the most evanescent, rudimentary, and infantile speculations on the unseen powers of nature, their origin or character. As men multiplied, as communities arose, Nations have been found and still exist, whose...
