Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: . . . the ice and abandoned by the crew, the members of which were picked up by the King and Wing on Wrangell Island, a year ago last September. Until the month before last nothing had been heard of Stefannson and his companions, and it seemed they must have perished. Louis Lane, captain of the power schooner Polar Bear, brought back to civilization the news that the explorer and his party are alive and have resumed their efforts to find new Arctic lands. The Polar Bear outfitted in Seattle, March, 1915, for a trading expedition and to hunt walrus and polar bear in the Arctic. Besides taking on the regulation supply of ammunition, knives and trinkets to exchange with the Eskimos for whalebone and ivory, Lane stocked up with Standard products, for he planned to search the Arctic seas for Stefannson. This included about 10, 000 gallons of Red Crown gasoline, distillate, lubricating oil and kerosene. Also he ordered forwarded to Point Barrow 8800 more gallons of the Companys products. Stefannson and his companions, according to report, were found by Captain Lane at Kellet, on the west coast of Banksland, August II. After arranging for passage for himself and crew on another motor vessel cruising in the Arctic, Lane is said to have chartered his vessel with its supply of petroleum products to the explorer, and in the Polar Bear Stefannson is presumably now fighting his way farther north. The truck made its own road while hauling out...
